Some homes carry a certain kind of warmth that comes from decades of being loved, lived in, and cherished. The Altamont located at 120 Altamont Drive is one of those homes. Set on a quiet Hurley street where mornings rise in stillness and afternoons feel unhurried, this raised ranch invites you into a story that's already rich with memory and ready for its next chapter. Natural light moves through the main level from morning to late afternoon, brightening every corner and giving the home an easy, uplifting feel. The living room, dining room, and eat-in kitchen connect in a smooth, intuitive flow creating a layout that makes everyday life effortless and gatherings feel organic. Hardwood floors throughout the main living area with some hidden beneath the carpeting, offering the option to reveal even more of the home's original character. The eat-in kitchen, finished with granite countertops, has long been the heart of the home. A place where coffee brews, conversations linger, and culinary creations are made. The formal dining room sits just beyond, ready for holidays, dinner parties, and slow Sunday meals that stretch into late into the evening. Outside, the expansive back deck becomes a retreat of its own, overlooking a spacious backyard where seasons shift in color and texture. The four-seat hot tub sits ready for slow evenings under the sky creates a place to exhale, reconnect, or simply enjoy the quiet nights. Downstairs, the lower-level recreation room offers a cozy contrast. Anchored by a fireplace, it's the ideal spot for movie nights, game days, or relaxed weekends. A half bath adds convenience, and an additional room gives you the flexibility of a home office, gym, studio, or storage space. The two-car garage provides practicality and storage for all the things that make life full. Hurley itself adds a sense of place that's hard to replicate. Known for its centuries-old stone houses and deep Revolutionary-era roots, the town feels like a living piece of Hudson Valley history. There's a quiet dignity here and a feeling of being part of something enduring. Just a minutes away is Uptown Kingston, with its vibrant Stockade District, boutique shops, cafés, galleries, and array of restaurants. It's the perfect blend: the serenity of Hurley paired with the cultural energy of one of the Hudson Valley's most dynamic areas.
